

Nandini Sharma, United States

Nandini Sharma is student editor of BMJ Case Reports.

Nandini Sharma is a dental student at Case Western Reserve School Dental Medicine. She is involved with the Free Clinic of Greater Cleveland and American Student Dental Association. Currently her research interest is in integrating oral health into medicine. Prior to dental school she received her MSc in Human Nutrition from Columbia University where she worked to develop a model that uses dental findings to screen patients for diabetes. As an undergraduate at Case Western Reserve University she collected data on community attitudes towards fluoridation and researched information about tobacco cessation as part of a needs assessment of oral health in Massachusetts. This provided her with a valuable foundation in dental public health and led her to conduct her senior capstone project on access to paediatric oral care in Orville, Ohio.
